Hi Robert,

Please see the statement from Oncor below.

Oncor appreciates the Commissioners' thoughtful review of these projects. Today's decision aligns with what years of engineering studies by our state's grid experts have repeatedly concluded: that these projects are essential to the reliability of electric service in West Texas and to the overall stability of the ERCOT grid.

We recognize that transmission projects, including the regulatory process involved in their development, can have meaningful impacts on landowners, community members, and other participating stakeholders, and we take seriously the feedback shared with us throughout this process. Oncor is committed to treating impacted landowners with respect and working collaboratively with them throughout the easement process. This includes evaluating landowner requests for route deviations consistent with the ordering language expected to be used by the Commission, which can help minimize potential impacts while meeting engineering, reliability, and safety requirements.

Hope you're well. Regarding the memo Chairman Gleeson wrote for 59029 and 59315 dockets, will Oncor pledge not to use eminent domain should they fail to come to agreement with any impacted landowners?

Thanks,

Robert Montoya
