Robert,

Please see the below statement, which you may attribute either to Oncor or to me as Oncor spokesperson. Thank you.

- Andrew

Oncor's mission has long been to provide safe and reliable electric delivery service, and to provide that service in an efficient and cost-effective manner. We recognize the pressures that rising utility bills may have on our customers.

As Texas continues to experience extraordinary growth, Oncor is supporting the state's energy needs through record construction and maintenance efforts, increased storm recovery efforts, and an ongoing focus on safety and reliability. The referenced April rate change was a result of the PUCT approval of our comprehensive base rate review, following the unopposed, comprehensive settlement reached with involved parties, including the Steering Committee of Cities Served by Oncor. The adjustment primarily reflected increased costs from past storms, inflation and other economic factors that Oncor has worked to absorb for several years.

The percentage of a customer's electric bill attributable to Oncor depends on the customer's retail electricity plan. Oncor's regulated delivery charges are one component of the bill, while retail electricity prices and plan structures vary. We encourage customers to use the PUCT's www.powertochoose.org to compare retail electricity plans and total prices and select the option that best meets their needs.

Regarding the study, please see the response recently provided to Hunter Burney below:

Oncor recognizes that affordability is important to customers and we remain committed to responsibly managing cost while safely and reliably serving customers and building the infrastructure needed to support Texas' continued growth. The year-over-year increase in net income is explained within the second-quarter earnings release, and reflects several factors, including regulated revenues associated with infrastructure investments, new base rates, customer
